

UNCLE SAM OPENS FIFTH AVENUE SHOP

He Is Buying Old Gold, Silver and Platinum With War Savings Stamps.

BRISK TRADE IS STARTED

German Woman Disposes of Wedding Ring and Gives Proceeds to Red Cross.

A new Fifth avenue shop unlike any other was opened yesterday in the window of the old building at 407 West 11th street. It is the Uncle Sam's War Savings Stamp Store. It is a place where the public can buy old gold, silver, and platinum with war savings stamps. The store is open from 10 o'clock to 6 o'clock. The first day's business was brisk. A German woman came in and sold her wedding ring for $100.00. She gave the proceeds to the Red Cross.

Most appealing offers were received. The most appealing was that of a gray-haired woman who offered her wedding ring for $100.00. She gave the proceeds to the Red Cross. The store is a success. It is a place where the public can buy old gold, silver, and platinum with war savings stamps.

Gov. Whitman sends down from Albany a tiny Indian silver coffee pot. It was the first article bought when the market was opened. The price of the coffee pot was $100.00. The store is a success. It is a place where the public can buy old gold, silver, and platinum with war savings stamps.

Mrs. Deane and her associates on the committee all brought gold, silver, and platinum pieces of their own to trade for savings stamps. The other members are Mrs. Charles L. Tiffany, vice-chairman; Mrs. F. P. Morgan, secretary; Mrs. Alfred H. Hays, Mrs. Thomas H. Lamont, Mrs. E. M. G. Morgan, Mrs. Herbert L. Pratt, Mrs. Gordon Mills Reid, and Mrs. Frank A. Vanderbilt.

At a long counter sat those who had come with metal, waiting to have it appraised. With three sets of jeweler's scales, for gold, silver, and platinum, an expert from the store of M. C. G. Co. weighed the ware, while Mr. Gattie sat in another corner and passed final judgment on values. In the weeks to come, the store will be a place where the public can buy old gold, silver, and platinum with war savings stamps.

A silver pitcher and a soup ladle were other woman's burden. Cup won in golf tournaments lay on the counter. Side salt cellars, baby's napkin ring and gold earrings. An especially shrewd woman sold her 18-karat platinum bracelet for which her teeth had no further use. At 5 o'clock, when the shop was shut for the day, $700 worth of War Savings Stamps had been paid out.

In the miscellaneous collection of metal objects were a few of pewter. It was announced that no pewter would be accepted here, as the clerks were too busy refilling in the more precious metals.

$100,000 BAIL PUTS O'LEARY IN TOMBS

Alleged That Vanished Jeremiah's Brother John Was About to Disappear.

FEDERAL SEARCH FOILED

Barnes and De Woody Take Drastic Action in Fighting Sinn Fein Germanism.

John J. O'Leary was held in $100,000 bail yesterday by Samuel M. Hitchcock, United States Commissioner for a hearing June 3 on a charge of conspiring to obstruct justice. John O'Leary, is alleged to have aided the plans of Jeremiah A. O'Leary, his brother, to evade trial on a charge of violating the espionage act.

When John O'Leary was arrested, he was in practice with his brother, Jeremiah, at 52 Broadway. Since Jeremiah was declared a fugitive from justice a week ago yesterday John has figured in the case as one who was directing the family's search for a member that was believed to have absconded himself because of temporary mental derangement.

The arrest of John O'Leary on Sunday was an unanticipated event in a case that is taking all of the long working hours of Chief Charles De Woody and most of the agents in the New York Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice. The two chief assistants, United States Attorneys, and a Federal Grand Jury.

Called Over Brother's Affairs.

The overt act alleged in the complaint against John O'Leary is the making of a power of attorney by which he assumed control of the affairs of his brother, Jeremiah. The power of attorney is alleged to have been made on May 4, three days before Jeremiah disappeared.

Called Disappearing Family.

WIFE LIGHTS FIRE UNDER SOMNOLENT SAFE MOVER

Adopts Desperate Measure When Both Boiling Water and Ice Fail to Get a Rise Out of Sluggard.

As his wife ripped away his nightshirt from the collar band and set a lump of ice between his shoulders, the safe mover Padraic Nolan stirred uneasily in his sleep, his lips moving in the familiar words of that quotation from Dr. Johnson which had grown abhorrent to the woman:

"Sir, the world is filled with bodes whose solitary virtue it is that they arise with the dark. They are identifiable in any society and under any disguise. They invariably expend that portion of their performance, and the remaining portion in sleeping them off."

Then Mrs. Nolan crossed to a stove and set a tin of water to boil. As an ebullition became a fact she caught up the kettle and wrenching away the quilts she poured the scalding water over the sleeper. She had thought a pint would be sufficient to bring his mind from the dream world to the fact that her husband was actually, but not the fact that he was merely posing as her eyes a moment and inquired if the morning papers were yet in. With a low cry the woman caught up her hat and shawl.

At the Court of Domestic Relations today her wife was sorry, but that since he had committed no overt act they were powerless to assist her. She returned to the castle of somnolence at 105 Raymond street, but before going up stairs equipped herself with a quart of kerosene at the green grocer's.

It was following the report of the harness man on beat that Fire Marshal Brophy district called on Mrs. Nolan into custody on the complaint of neighbors that arson had been attempted in the house. They said that when they had been called to the house they found the safe mover in a state of unconsciousness. The safe mover, to their consternation, lay imperturbably between the sheets and was mumbling from a book which he held in his hand. The title page was the name of a man called Stevenson, evidently his author, and the passage which lay immediately under the safe mover's thumb had this beginning:

"Day comes again, bringing its petty round of irritating duties and concerns."

Yesterday thousands upon thousands lined the sidewalks, the windows and the doorways and the departing sons of Liberty to the echo.

"We'll take the Hun on his bun," said one banner.

BROADWAY CHEERS AS DRAFT MEN GO

Thronging Line Curls to Bid Farewell to Contingents Starting South.

MAYOR REVIEWS SOME SAYS HE KEPT $5,000

Many Fathers and Mothers March With Their Sons to the Ferry.

Sherman marched through Georgia. We will march to Georgia. And on to Germany.

Then we were divided—The North and South were foes; But to-day united country On to Berlin goes.

So the fighting poet who has been called to the colors painted that legend yesterday on a banner that the drafted men from Local Board 91 bore through Park Row as they went singing to the Pennsylvania ferry on the first leg of their journey to Soldierland. It was a rollicking, dancing, enthusiastic lot of youngsters that gave the downtown district a touch of high life yesterday when the second day of departure from the business district was observed.

Yesterday thousands upon thousands lined the sidewalks, the windows and the doorways and the departing sons of Liberty to the echo.

"We'll take the Hun on his bun," said one banner.

TELLS HOW $20,500 SHUT OFF INQUIRY

Other $15,500 Went to Friend of Massachusetts District Attorney.

The trials and tribulations of selling stock in the Emerson Motors Corporation in Boston in 1916 were revealed yesterday at the trial of that company and other defendants in the Federal District Court by Francis M. Carroll, a Boston attorney.

Carroll, called by the Government, testified he had been retained by Robert P. Matches, one of the defendants, as counsel for the Robert P. Matches Company in Boston; that in October, 1916, he met Amos S. Stephens, counsel for the Emerson Motors Company through Matches, and that after a visit to the offices of Joseph C. Pelletier, District Attorney in that city, he received $20,500 in cash from the Emerson stockholders and $5,000 of which he retained for himself as a retainer. Cokely got $500.

Assistant United States District Attorney James W. Osborne 2d asked the witness if he had met Stephens in October, 1916.

"I met Stephens," said Carroll, "asked on that day—I believe it was October 8—that what was going on in Boston, and I said I couldn't say. I was not a party to anything going on. Matches had spoken of an investigation, but I couldn't see it."

Stephens said that he wanted to make sure about the $20,500 and went as far as I could, but that we could find out for sure from Cokely, a friend of the District Attorney, and if there was anything going on in that office he would know it.

"I saw Cokely and reported to Matches and Stephens that Cokely had said such an investigation was going on. They said they would let me see Cokely, and we went up there."

The witness testified that at that conference Cokely had asked about the fact that the Emerson Motor Company and about the production of cars and that Matches and Stephens had explained the situation to Cokely's apparent satisfaction.

Carroll said that while the conference was on in Cokely's office Stephens expressed a desire to talk with the District Attorney and that he accompanied Pelletier, Stephens and Matches to Mr. Pelletier's office.
